The Aquarium, Brighton, was built in 1872 at a cost of £133,000. The tanks, containing marine and fresh-water animals, are some of them very capacious: the largest measuring over 100 feet in length by 40 feet in width and holding 100,000 gallons of sea water. Salt water is conveyed from the sea into reservoirs and thence into the tanks, where it is constantly aerated and kept in circulation.
